Even Russia and China have become at least theoretical democracies, Germany is at this moment organizing a republic, and Persia and Turkey profess to be constitutional monarchies; while India and Egypt alone remain under administrations not accountable to the people. That is of course not to say that they are not governed for the benefit of the people. We believe that they are, to a much greater extent than some countries which have nominally democratic governments. But that is not sufficient. Your benevolent despotism may be the best possible government; so long as your despot remains benevolent. But you have no assurance of any such perseverance of the saints.

A NEW "GILBERT PARKER"

"Hell—That Old Whale and Her!"

That's what Jonas Billings said when Joel Mazarine first brought his young wife, Louise, to Askatoon.

The law of the love of youth for youth is the background of the story. Louise Mazarine, a willowy slip of a girl, and Joel Mazarine, her husband, sixty-five—these are the violation of the law.

distinguished statesman and patriot, endowed above most of his contemporaries with the moral authority to speak of and for three hundred million people, has devoted his thought and time and strength to what he modestly calls a study in political evolution and what we must esteem as perhaps the most just convincing and satisfactory discussion of Indian affairs, present and prospective, that has been given to the say, a somewhat startling reflection that two of the greatest members of the freest and most enlightened empire of the world are practically the has ever suffered. There must be, then, no severance of the tie which binds the Indian Empire to the United Kingdom, but the work of English government for India must continue until, ernment for India must continue until, in the fulness of time, it becomes commensurately government by India. Such is the argument of this noteworthy essay in enlightened statesmanship, and we may confidently expect that it will prevail in the counsels of the world's greatest empire.

Supreme wisdom was expressed in Lincoln's formula. The people were to be governed, not merely for the people, but also by the people, and not merely by the people, but also for the people. Perhaps it may be wise and necessary that for a time they shall be governed by a power not of their own, the sole justification of which must be that it governs them for their good and also that it constantly and sincerely makes for a status in which they may govern themselves. The Aga Khan appreciates this, and, indeed, makes it one of the chief texts of his most illuminating study. He says:

"If there is one thing which modern history proves, it is this: That unless the government and the governing classes take up the task of
